
World Ocean Day June 8th 2020

Today is World Oceans Day, a celebration of the huge role oceans play in our everyday lives and a way to raise awareness of the damage we are doing to them.

Did you know that

- 70% of the earth's surface is covered by oceans
- 96.5% of the Earth' water is held by the oceans
- 70% of the oxygen we breathe is produced by the oceans
- We have only explored 5% of the oceans?

Think about this

- Oceans feed us
- Oceans regulate our climate
- Oceans make the oxygen that we breathe

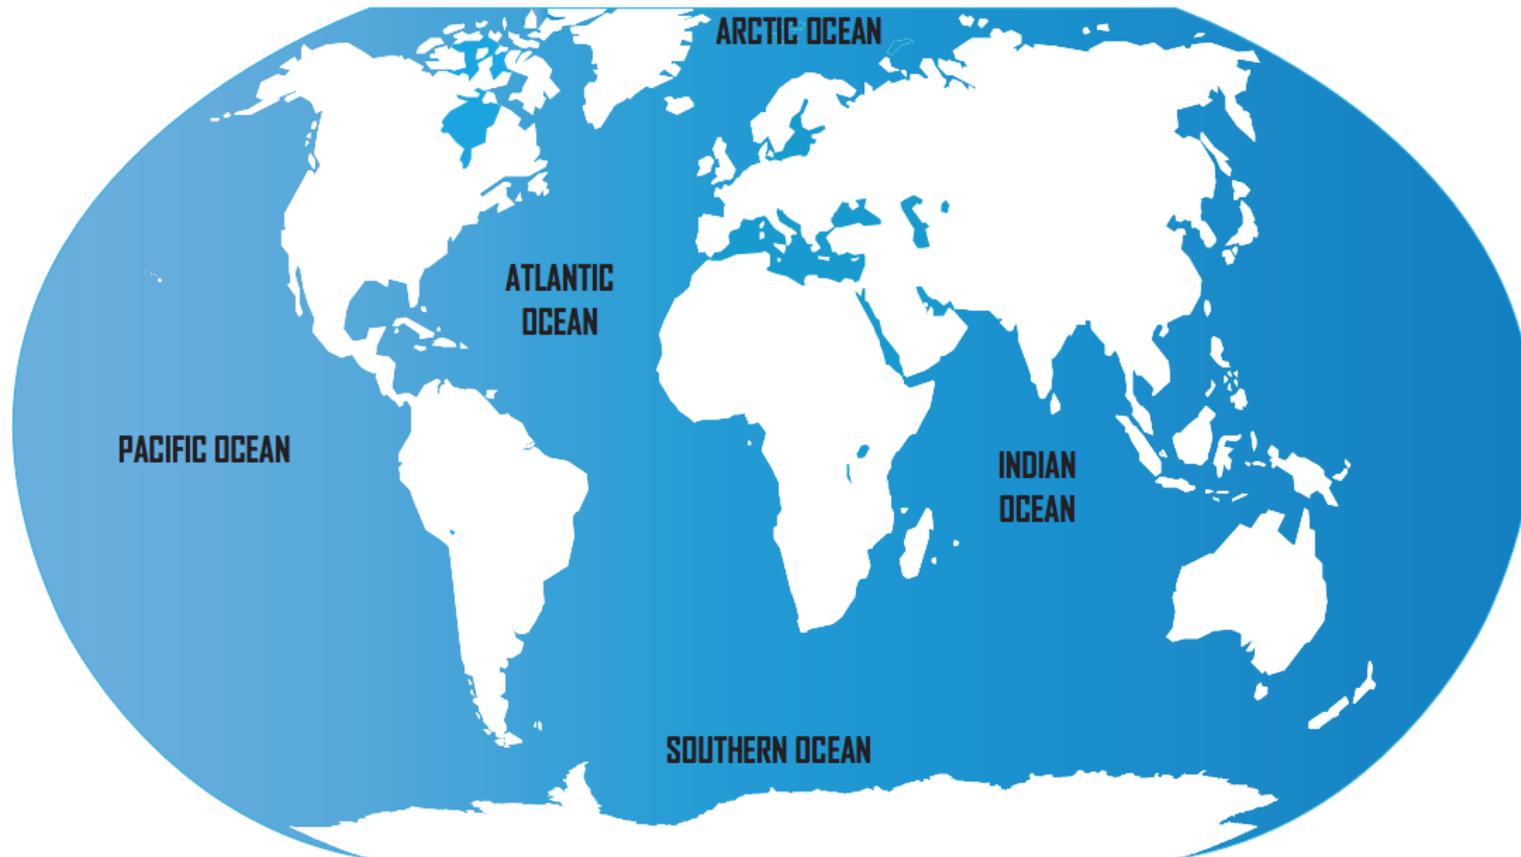

And yet we take oceans for granted. We pollute them with our rubbish, plastic and chemicals. We overfish and destroy the sea life in them and our activities on land are raising their temperatures!

We all have a responsibility to look after our planet/oceans and it starts at home with the Three Rs

Before we go any further, how many of the five Oceans can you name?

For a lot of people, this week will mean an opportunity to get to the beach if only for a walk. This is a great way to blow off the cobwebs and clear your head. It's even better if you can get into the water to have a swim! Louth is a coastal county as it touches the Irish Sea. There are other counties blessed to touch the ocean, say for example Sligo! Both counties have one thing in common...beaches and happy memories. Flasks of tea or coffee, luke warm sandwiches and the certain promise of an ice cream cone. Deckchairs held aloft, towels under arm, buckets and spades dangling in the other. I often wondered how my parents carried it all !!

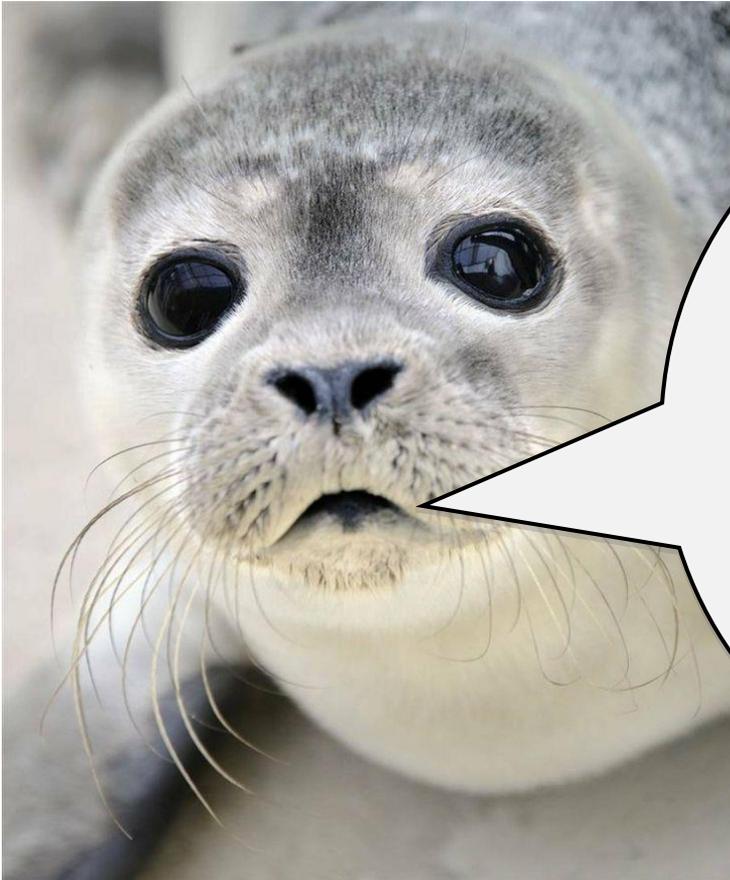

So can you identify these beaches in Louth?

Look at the clipart pictures below. Comment on each one

If the baby seal could talk, what do you think it would say to us about polluting his habitat, the place where he lives?
